Students work to find proper food

Hannah Loftus | COLLEGIAN

A student wanders in circles around the K-State Union Food Court. She stares at the people in line, their trays piled high with delicious desserts, juicy thick hamburgers, and various snacks. All are tempting, but her better judgment leads her to the lonely salad bar.

Her name is Mayra Rivarola, and she is allergic to gluten.

It started when Rivarola, senior in journalism and mass communications, began losing weight. Weighing only 104 pounds, she was finally diagnosed with celiac disease.

"Gluten is a protein found in wheat, rye, barley, and tricale," Rivarola said. "I was losing so much weight when I finally found out I had the disease, but now I'm only sick when I'm off my diet."

There is no cure for the disease other than avoiding all foods that contain gluten. This includes bread, pizza, doughnuts, pasta, and most processed foods.

Rivarola has a very hard time finding food on campus that she can safely consume. She said she can't really eat at the food court in the Union. She can only eat some of the fruit that is offered, or a salad without croutons. There are no places on campus that offer allergy-friendly food, she said.

Not much of a choice.

However, Rivarola is part of a growing problem on campus - more students are coming to college with moderate to severe allergies. The dining services department is noticing a marked increase in the number of students with allergies, said Sherry Bonawitz, director of Kramer Dining Center.

We are seeing more of them than ever before, and there are many different theories on the issue," Bonawitz said. "Over the past three to five years more students are coming to college with food allergies. This includes milk, egg, peanuts, tree nuts, walnuts, fish, shellfish, soy and wheat. Gluten is our second biggest allergy." Dianna Schalles, an allergy specialist at Lafene Health Clinic, said food allergies frequently begin in childhood and the affected individuals typically learn prior to college age what foods they need to avoid. She said 4 percent of adults have food allergies, a trend similar to K-State's. To combat the issue, the dining center offers dietitians for students to consult with. "We can kind of point them in the right direction," Bonawitz said. "But it's the ultimate responsibility of the student to know what they can and cannot eat, but we can refer them to our dietician and they can help them with labels and how to identify foods."

Bonawitz added most of their food is made from scratch and they do offer soymilk and some naturally gluten-free products including different cereals.

For students like Tara Theis, senior in elementary education, the process of finding food is not

Woman taken to hospital

Hannah Blick | COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan woman was taken to the hospital yesterday after she failed to stop at a stop sign at an intersection, according to a report from the Riley County Police Department.

The accident occurred at 7:30 a.m. at the intersection of Allen Road and Judson Street, said RCPD Lt. Herb Crosby.

Grace Knight, 79, of 1950 Judson, was driving a 2002 Kia Sedona van northbound on Judson and, after failing to stop at the stop sign at the intersection, struck another vehicle traveling eastbound on Allen. The driver of that vehicle was Courtney McLaurin, 26, of Junction City, according to the report.

Knight was transported to Mercy Regional Hospital with non-life threatening injuries, and both vehicles were towed from the scene, Crosby said.

Knight was issued a citation for inattentive driving and failure to yield right-ofway when entering an intersection, according to the re-

VEHICLE BURGULARY

More than $3,000 worth in personal items were stolen from an unlocked car in Manhattan earlier this week, according to a report from the Riley County Police Department.

The incident occurred sometime between 8 p.m. on Monday and 10:30 a.m. on Tuesday, said RCPD Lt. Herb Crosby.

The victim, Lacy Deters, 26, of 2217 Sloan St., reported $3,259 in electronics and jewelry stolen from her vehicle, which was parked outside her residence, Crosby said.

The items include an Apple iPod Nano, an iPod cigarette charger, a pack of cigarettes, a pair of 14 carat white gold earrings, a lady's Gucci watch, a 14 carat Bellarri necklace and an Omega necklace, according to the report.

No arrests have been made.

CiCo Pool renovation design introduced

Danny Davis | COLLEGIAN

The development teams for the CicCo Park Pool held an informational meeting last night at Frank Bergman Elementary School. They are asking for community input on features they would like to see in the renovated pool.

The pool was built in 1988 and still has the original filter room and water treatment system. Part of the proposed plan is to renovate the filter room and replace the water treatment system. Dave Schwartz of Water's Edge Aquatic Design, one of the design firms on the project, said the City of Manhattan wants to get 20 more years of use out of the current pool. The design firm is planning the filter system replacement as a way of achieving that goal, Schwartz said.

Most notably in the new design, the current wading pool is removed along with its central step structure. In its place, a new shallow pool with a zero-depth entry will be constructed. Currently, the wading pool is 1,900 square feet The new pool will measure at 4,200 square feet, a considerable increase in size.

In the new shallow pool, the design teams have offered a variety of possible structures for kids to play on. Among the considerations are a toddler's slide, water walk, current channel (small version of a lazy river without rafts) and water spray. These are the items the design firms want

"I think everybody's just going to be happy to have that improved play area for kids," Schwartz said. "It will provide a more traditional, yet upgraded, facili-

But the focus is not solely on the pool area, Schwartz said. Other areas within the renovation include the concession

City, County to hold joint meeting

Vestoria Simmons | COLLEGIAN

Earlier this week, the Manhattan City Commission canceled its regular work session, and opted to hold a special meeting later in the week with both the City Commission and the Board of Riley County Commissioners. The special meeting will be held today at 4 p.m. in the City Commission Room at City Hall, located at 1101 Poyntz Ave.

Mayor Bob Strawn said both the Riley County commissioners and the City commissioners will discuss whether the commission will allocate the funds in order to hire a food safety inspector for the city. A proposal was presented to the commission during the March 24 commission meeting for the funding a food safety inspector, after the position was removed due to budget cuts, among other reasons.

Learning Center provides opportunity for student service

Austin Enns | COLLEGIAN

In a large room located at 901 Yuma, primary and secondary education students are slowly learning that math, science and even spelling are a lot easier than they ever thought possible.

Tutors, many of them K-state students, pair up with one to two students and lend a helping hand with subjects in which they feel confident enough to provide assistance. This big room, students and tutors are all part of the Douglas Learning Center, a local community program whose mission is to create better lives "one child at a time."

Marianne Cullers, co-founder of the center and head director, said she and assistant director Don Slater started the center in January 1996, a few months after she retired from the education field.

"I quit teaching September 1995, my cat and dog had died, and my daughter had had a sur-said. "I was asked to tutor and I had time, so I showed up with a pad of paper and two pencils."

Every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday from 5 to 7 p.m., a diverse group of students show up to do homework or study for tests. After completing the homework, the students are encouraged to work on worksheets, provided in personalized folder, that are geared toward helping them improve academically in subjects that are difficult for them.

Katherine Rimer, seventh grade student at Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School, said that the learning center has given her a good learning experi-

"The tutors have really helped me, and my grade is going up," Rimer said.

Cullers said the learning center tutors kids between kindergarten and 12th grade, but preschoolers can also come if there are enough tutors.

Originally, the Douglas Learning Center was meant for high school kids, but kids from grade school started showing up, and the mission was modified. Cullers started recruiting from her aerobics class and a retired teachers group as a way to cope with all grade school students.

Taylor McLemore, freshman in elementary education, is a frequent volunteer at the center, and she was also named the 2010 Outstanding K-state Student Volunteer by the K-State Volunteer Center of Manhattan.

"I picked this service project because I'm in the education field, and it's allowing me to get experience with kids before I'm even in the classroom," McLemore said. "It's helped me learn that this is something I want to do with my life."

McLemore said she is at the learning center almost every week for two hours each day on Mondays and Wednesdays.

Part of the enticement for Mc-Lemore is the chance to work with international students because of the communication gap.

"I've worked with many international students, and it has been a big challenge for me to overcome the language barriers, and it has taught me how to communicate in a lot of different ways, as well as a lot about different cultures."

When students are not working on homework or extra worksheets, the students can read books provided in the center, or tutors can participate in learning games with their charges. Some of the notable games involve multiplication and fake money, but there are also games that are more recognizable and less learning-focused, like Scrabble and Apples to Apples.

K-State helps make the services provided by the learning center possible, and Cullers indicated it would be hard for the center to exist without volunteers from K-State.

"Many of our tutors are from service clubs on campus, some are from the volunteer center, and some hear about it through their friends," Cullers said.

Chimes Junior Honorary Society, the National Society of Collegiate Scholars, and dual language classes are a few of the many groups that help mentor students at the Douglas Learning Center.

Students who want to volunteer have to fill out a contact form saying when they can volunteer, and the kids have to sign a behavior pledge with their parents as well as a slip granting the center permission to receive class information from teachers. This helps the center figure out what additional games and worksheets they need to add to the students' folders.

Cullers said there are many students in need of tutors this year, and some nights see as many as 25 kids seeking help. Potential tutors are always welcome, as long as they have a good attitude and are eager to help "one child at a time."

Money should go to fund academics

In a capitalistic society, the importance of certain aspects of life are directly related to the money spent on them. Such is the case at K-State. Seven out of the 10 top paid employees at K-State are sports coaches, according to a recent article in the Manhattan Mercury.

That professional sports coaches make ludicrous amounts of money is ridiculous. So what adjective describes the insanity of college coaches making millions of dollars? Absurd doesn't seem strong enough. An university can justify spending over $2 million a year on a head football coach, but can also justify the need to raise tuition for people trying to get an education.

The average faculty salary at K-State is $70,000 a year. That's less than one-tenth of what men's basketball coach Frank Martin makes.

The former president of the university, Jon Wefald, made $301,980 a year. The dean of the College of Engineering John English makes $246,549 a year. Martin makes more than both of these men combined.

The average full professor makes $111,046 a year, according to the Mercury article. Bill Snyder is the highest paid employee of K-State, making $2.6 million a year. Financially speaking, at K-State the football coach is worth 23.9 professors.

What kind of image are we trying to portray to the academic world? That we enjoy football more than we enjoy learning? K-State was the first land-grant university created after the Morrill Act of 1862. Land-grant universities were created in response to the industrial revolution to provide education in agriculture and the mechanical arts.

No disrespect to Bill Snyder and Frank Martin; both are great coaches that have turned our programs into nationally respected athletic teams. But should the financial focus of our university really be athletics?

Think of the brilliant minds we could mold if we took this money and used it to develop new teaching strategies, create more vaccines for swine pathogens; award more scholarships, or fund any aspect of education instead of sports.

Imagine if we paid President Schulz like he was a hero of the university, applauded him when he made changes that helped students; cheered him for trying to improve our image in the world of academia; gave a standing ovation if he took power away from athletics and gave it back to education. These are the things we should cheer for, the true victories of our institution of higher education.

Manhattan re-namesake would reflect city origin

I thought it was totally ridiculous when Topeka renamed itself "Google, Kansas" for a month, but then April Fool's Day rolled but then April Fool's Day rolled around and Google named itself "Topeka" for a day. I've been reflecting upon that for the last couple of weeks, and it occurred to me that Topeka might be on to something.

Manhattan has been trying to carve a name for itself for a long time, and although sports fans in the Midwest may be familiar with our purple colored Wildcats, a great many people have never heard of us.

I went to the Great American Beer Festival in Denver in 2006 as part of the Brew Crew from Little Apple Brewing Company. My dad and I ran into some very nice gentlemen from a brewery in New York who were shocked to find out that not only is there a Manhattan in Kansas, but its nickname is "The Little Apple." One of them was so charmed by the idea that he ended up trading T-shirts with my dad so he'd have evidence to show to friends and family when he got home.

I experienced the same phenomenon last year when I got bored and Topeka -- er, I mean Googled -- my name. I discovered there was an artist named Karen Ingram living in New York who even shared my middle initial. On a whim, I sent her an email with greetings from The Little Apple. She was so amused by the whole thing, we exchanged post cards in the mail so she could show her friends she has a doppelganger living in the Big Apple's doppelganger.

I've come to the conclusion that we need to take drastic measures to get the Little Apple on the map for all to see. This is why I propose that we temporarily rename Manhattan, like Topeka did, to grab the attention of the Big Apple and the rest of the na-

But what to name ourselves? There are so many choices. Amazon? Yahoo!? Hampsterdance.

No, we need something catchy. That is why I vote for "The Fail Whale."

Yes, the Fail Whale from Twitter is just what we need to steal the hearts and imaginations of people everywhere. It is the perfect analogy for this town.

You disagree? You think "Fail Whale" is a little too negative of a name? Consider this: Manhattan was founded by accident when a steamboat headed for what is now Junction City ran aground on a sand bar in the river. That's right, folks: we're not even supposed to be here. If that doesn't spell "Fail Whale," Kansas, then I don't know what does.

Yes, Manhattan is the charming town in Kansas that was founded by dumb luck and fueled by football. When I look at a picture of Twitter's cute and charming little Fail Whale being carried in a net by birds, I see the opportunity to change those birds into tiny little Willie Wildcats with wings.

This is the chance of a lifetime, people. Let's change Manhattan into the Fail Whale and tell the whole world what's Manhappenin' in Kansas.

New officers welcome students' ideas

Dear Wildcats,

Hello K-State students! What a busy spring it has turned out to be. Annie and I would like to thank all of you for this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to serve as your Student Body President and Vice President. We couldn't be more excited about this coming year.

We moved into our new office at Office of Student Activities and Services this week and are beginning to strategically plan what we hope to accomplish throughout this next year. As our first official week as president and vicepresident, Annie and I are very excited to start building a team for the year. Our Cabinet will be established by the April 22, Student Senate meeting.

We are pleased to announce the appointment of David Starshak as Attorney General.

Attorney General.

Annie and I are very excited to begin our year of service and want you to know how open we are to your input and ideas for K-State. You can email me at dunruh2@ksu. edu and Annie at aoliver@ksu.edu. Stop by OSAS anytime to see us and let us know your ideas. We'll have coffee waiting.

ISSS helps international students adjust, socialize

Emily Snell | COLLEGIAN

An international student at a winter clothing drive selects several heavy coats, even though he already owns one. When questioned about it by an adviser, the student explains he believes American fashion dictates that wearing the same winter coat every day is unaccept-

International Student and Scholar Services, or ISSS, has addressed many simple misunderstandings and larger crises in its efforts to help international students at K-State adjust to life in Kansas, said Karl Anderson, an international student ad-

"We work with the students once they get here," Anderson said. "We introduce them to campus and give them the information they need to adjust to campus. We're their main point of contact on campus for immigration and work issues."

ISSS director Sara Thurston-Gonzalez said the department primarily advises K-State's nearly 1,700 international students about immigration issues.

"We help the students get work permission, bring dependents, if they want to travel, any sort of immigration-type issue," she said.

Another role of the department, Thurston-Gonzalez said, is to assist students in crisis situations, like problems in their home countries or personal struggles here. For example, ISSS reached out to students from Haiti and Chile after the earthquakes there earlier this semester.

Thurston-Gonzalez explained that in times of crisis, ISSS conexplained tacts students, informs them of government programs that may help them, inquires about family issues, deals with the media and provides resources.

Besides offering guidance to students during stressful circumstances, Thurston-Gonzalez said ISSS also operates numerous programs and social events for international students. Basic Language Training, or BLT, is a six-week language program organized by ISSS. It allows native speakers to teach their languages to students and community members who enroll. BLT is offered in both the spring and fall semesters, but the languages being taught differ each time, Anderson explained.

"There's always people interested in taking courses," Anderson said. "I'm always kind of amazed at the number of international students who take the courses."

Liliana Baquero, an international graduate student from Colombia, has taught Spanish three times for BLT. She said she enjoys it because of the flexibility of the curriculum and the attitude of the students.

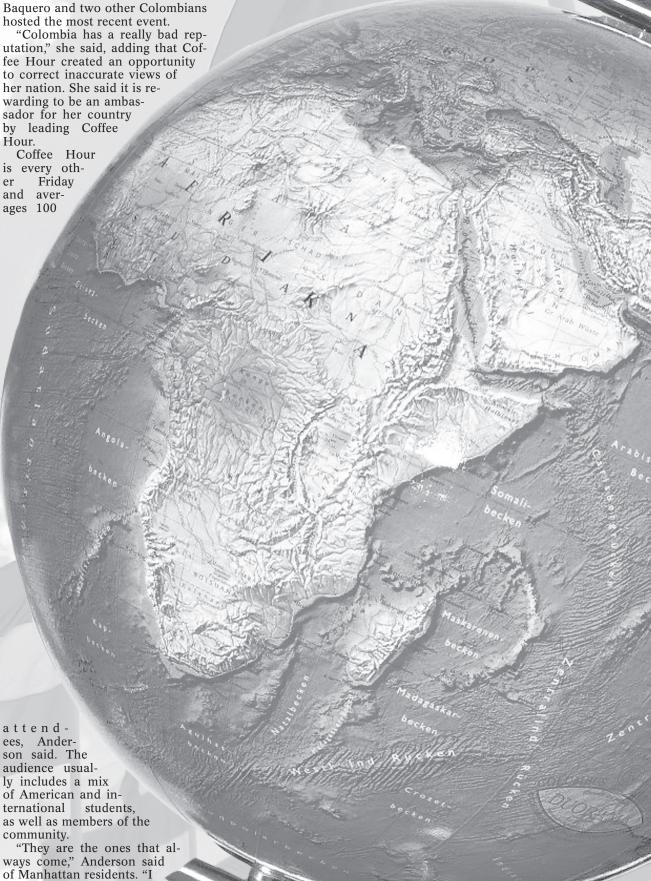

"I teach whatever I want to teach," Baquero said. "People are really motivated, and I like that. And it's a little extra cash."

Anderson said he thinks the community and the university work well together to meet international students and get to know them.

"In general, the university does a really good job of welcoming the international students here,' Anderson said. "I think the community of Manhattan does that as well. Our office does a very good job of making sure that we're always here for students."

Save money by taking advantage of student discounts

START SAVING MONEY WITH STUDENT DISCOUNTS!

Don't feel like making supper but can't spend money because you went wild and crazy over spring break? Well here are a few tips for going out and about Manhattan. Be smart and look for student discounts wherever you go!

1. Freddie's Frozen Custard gives all students a 10 percent discount every day. 2. Look for nightly specials. Buffalo Wild Wings offers discounted wings Tuesday through Thursday.

3. 2 p.m. through 4 p.m. is "Happy Hour" at Sonic, but you probably already

4. Use the coupon books that you picked up at the beginning of the semester. Just keep in mind the expiration

5. The Golden Wok Chinese restaurant gives students a discount for eating there. Also, try going during the lunch hour – it's cheaper and freshly made!

6. GTM Sportswear gives out a student discount as well. Don't forget they also have a clearance room full of goodies as well.

7. If you're of age, check out the local bars in Aggieville to see what they all have for student discounts or weekly/weekend specials. 8. Join "Wildcats Forever." It's a student alumni association at K-State. Just pay a fee of $15 for a free shirt and glass, and get a ton of discounts that are printed on the back of the card. Places that give discounts are Ballards Sporting Goods, Bronze Image Tanning, FedEx Kinkos, Lemmy's Pizzeria, Old Chicago, Zotcis Attire and many other places around the Manhattan area.

9. Also, look for ads in the K-State Collegian. Great way to pass time in class, right?

As you can see, there are a lot of places around Manhattan that give out discounts. You just have to look for them, ask and see if they have any and try to keep it cheap.

Coach Hill puts baseball back on map

I'll level with you - I don't know much about baseball. I can't tell you the difference between a fastball and curveball mid-flight. Nope. I can't do it. I won't even try.

As shoddy as my baseball knowledge is, I can tell you Brad Hill has done an amazing job with K-State baseball. Hill was a stud prior to coming to Manhattan, winning more than 80 percent of his games over a nine-season tenure. He led a Division II squad to seven College World Series appearances and won a national title.

I don't care what sport it is – football, basketball, swimming, curling or hot dog-eating contests. Winning more than 80 percent of your contests is impressive.

Even after losing Big 12 Pitcher of the Year A.J. Morris, Hill has his team poised to win 40 games for the second consecutive season. Never thought I would mention 40 and wins in the same sentence after last season, but with Hill, nothing is impossible.

Although his team dropped two games to BYU, Hill's team can stay in any game. The bat cats are definitely that. While this team is not going to overwhelm you with sheer power, consistent hitting keeps this team in contention.

Prior to Hill, the names that resonated deepest with K-State baseball were Craig Wilson and Earl Woods.

Under Hill, K-State baseball has accomplished some firsts. K-State defeated Texas in the 2005 series finale, which was not only the first win over Texas in 17 tries, but also the first win over a No. 1-ranked team. Three years later, K-State would make its first appearance in the Big 12 title game. In 2009, Morris became the school's first ever consensus

All-American. This column is not mean to disparage what former coach Mike Clark accomplished, but Hill, with help from former athletics director Tim Weiser, has turned K-State baseball into a regional power.

Hill was able to secure commitments from high school All-Americans. K-State had never been to an NCAA regional, yet Hill was able to convince these young men to leave the plush climates of Arizona and Texas and head to Man-

Hill did not rest on his laurels. No, Hill improved the talent he had and has put K-State baseball on the

I can only imagine the talent Hill can sway with more than an NCAA regional on his resume as a Division I skipper. Hill seems to be in good company. Bill Snyder orchestrated the greatest turnaround in college football history. Frank Martin is in the midst of turning K-State basketball around.

I am not going to compare Hill's success to that of Bill Snyder. It would not be fair to Hill or Snyder. Just last September, Hill signed a contract that will keep him in Manhattan for four more years.

After signing the contract, Hill said he and his family have enjoyed their first six years and look forward to spending more time in Manhattan.

Well, Brad, I think I speak for every K-State fan when I say you are welcome to stay as long as you like.

Wildcats drop second game of BYU roadtrip

Blake Thorson | COLLEGIAN

K-State fell for the second straight day to the Brigham Young University Cougars and was swept for the first time all season after a 13-10 defeat in Provo, Utah yesterday afternoon. The Wildcat pitching staff was battered once again as they gave up 18 Cougar hits after giving up 14 hits and 15 runs in Tuesday's contest.

The Wildcats managed to pound out 18 hits of their own but did most of their damage late in the ballgame after falling behind to the Cougars 11-1 after five innings.

For the second straight day, the Wildcats jumped in front 1-0 early in the game. Senior Adam Muenster laced a double down the left field line to lead off the third inning and later scored on sophomore Nick Martini's sacrifice fly. Once again, however, the Wildcat pitching staff could not hold the lead, and things went south in a

The Cougars sent 11 hitters to the plate in a six-run third inning while racking up seven hits. Starting pitcher Justin Lindsey (2-2) suffered his second loss of the season after a single and consecutive doubles scored three Cougar runs. Lindsey gave way to freshman Robert Hawkins, who promptly allowed a single for Lindsey's fourth earned run. BYU got two more runs on a wild pitch and an RBI-single before freshman Jake Doller got a strikeout to end the inning.

The boys from Provo weren't done, as they tacked on five more runs in the fifth inning to put the game away for good. BYU was led at the plate by Brandon Relf, Mark Anderson and Stephen Wells, who each recorded three hits. Catcher Bryce Ayoso also had two hits and belted a solo home run. Cougar starter Chris Howard (1-0) picked up the win, throwing four innings and giving up one run on six hits.

The Wildcats managed to plate nine runs in the last three innings, but it wasn't enough as they fell to 23-8 on the year. K-State did see some positive signs from some reserves. Freshman Ryan Moore went 2 for 2 with a double and three RBIs. Martini also kept his average well above .400 with a 3-for-3 performance. Backup catcher Chase Graskewicz also had three hits while starting catcher Daniel Dellasega, who served as the designated hitter, had three hits as well. Muenster went 2 for 4 and added a stolen base to his school-record total of 63.

Volleyball team headed for European tour

Sam Nearhood | COLLEGIAN

Europe has seen its fair share of despots, conquerors and bloody wars, but now it will face its greatest challenge yet: the K-State volleyball team.

This summer, the team will go on a whirlwind tour across the pond, playing in Hungary, Slovenia and Italy. Head coach Suzie Fritz said her team is looking forward to the trip.

"It's just really exciting for them," Fritz said. "I think it's a great opportunity for them."

Two years ago, the volleyball team was packed and ready to take China by storm, but the day before its departure, the group backing the trip declared bankruptcy, and the team had to cancel its plans. ESPN's Outside the Lines ran a feature on the conundrum, which caught the eye of a new benefactor.

William Edington read the piece and decided to right the wrong. With his non-profit organization, USA Athletes International, that sends young teams to play against international competition, Edington donated the money to send the Wildcats

"We've very thankful, because

USA Athletes International is basically providing this trip for us, and, in essence, trying to make it right for our China trip that fell through," Fritz said. "If it wasn't for them, we wouldn't have this opportunity.

Leaving spring semester, the team will spend most of its time in Hungary and Slovenia on its 10-day tour, hitting Italy for a quick stop before coming home. Fritz said this will be a good chance to learn from different volleyball teams.

Playing at an international level of competition and having an opportunity to play some different styles and some different things, I think, is always very valuable," Fritz said. "We're pretty young, and we need as much match experience as we can get right now."

The team will release match outcomes and post pictures of its travels daily on kstatesports.com, and one player will update fans every other day on the experience.

All welcome to lend a hand at community health clinic

April 18-24 is volunteer appreciation week, and FHCC has plenty of options for college students who want to help out the clinic of need volunteer hours.

FHCC, Flint Hills Community Clinic, is an organization that provides health care to those who cannot afford it. Their mission is to understand and serve the health and wellness needs of the medically under-served in our community by providing quality, compassionate and personalized care.

FHCC is always looking for administrative volunteers to help with data entry, filing, answering phones and even assisting within cleaning the facility. They especially need clinical volunteers though, so if you are a CNA, EMT or have any medical certification, your time would be greatly appreciated. FHCC can also provide internships to college students in fields such as nursing, accounting, Spanish and public relations.

Sandra Salas, a K-State student who is currently perusing a degree in Biology with an ultimate goal of medical school, explains, "Vol-unteering at the clinic has allowed me exposure to the medical field in general. It has also allowed me to help the Hispanic community in Manhattan, because I am able to interpret for them. I think that this is vital in their care because this way all of their medical concerns are addressed and they do not feel as intimidated to talk to a physi-Salas also said, "I really enjoy volunteering at the clinic because all of the volunteer staff is fun to work with. Not only are the volunteer staff great but so are Meghan and Sue Ann. They are both very devoted to their work and also enjoyable to be around. This makes volunteering easier, and more en-

Another way to help if you are in a school organization, fraternity or sorority is to have a fundraiser and donate the money raised to the clinic. FHCC is a non-profit organization so they rely on donations to continue to help the community.

If you would like to support FHCC it is located at 401 Houston Street and you can contact Meghan Finnegan or Sue Ann Wright at 785-323-4351. Donations are accepted by mail or you are welcome to stop by the clinic.

K-State students chosen for Alaska internship

Mayra Rivarola | COLLEGIAN

Students in the department of hospitality management and dietetics will be traveling to Alaska this summer to learn about the native culture and provide community health education to remote Eskimo villages.

Kelcii Peck, senior in dietetics and nutrition exercise, and Chelsi Thissen, senior in dietetics and public health nutrition, were chosen from a pool of about 100 applicants around the nation to intern with the Norton Sound Health Corporation in Nome,

"This is very exciting for us," said Deborah Canter, department head and professor of hospitality management and dietetics. "Two of the eight positions were filled by K-State stu-

Peck said she found out about the opportunity through a mass e-mail and was intrigued by it. After filling out a long application, she was interviewed by phone and found out she got the position only a few days lat-

Peck and Thissen will be working for the Chronic Care Active Management and Prevention Department (CAMP) as part of a program for the youth of Nome. The program is designed to help prevent diabetes and healthy living, according to the corporation Web site, www.nortonsoundhealth.org.

'This really is a unique opportunity to go to a very beautiful locations and to work with locals in Alaska," Canter said. "The two girls that are going combine nutrition with physical activities, things that children are really going to be attracted to."

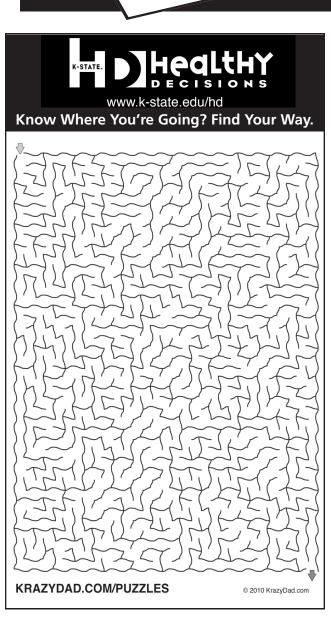

The students will be working for 40 hours a week. They will be planning and teaching nutrition and exercise classes and organizing different types of physical activities for children, including cooking, fishing and kayaking.

"I am very excited to see a different culture, even though it is still in the U.S.," Peck said. "It will be interesting to have 24 hours of sunlight."

Peck said she traveled to New Zealand last summer and would ultimately like to work with special populations in third world countries.

Students are encouraged to get unique experiences like this one in the U.S. or abroad, Canter said.

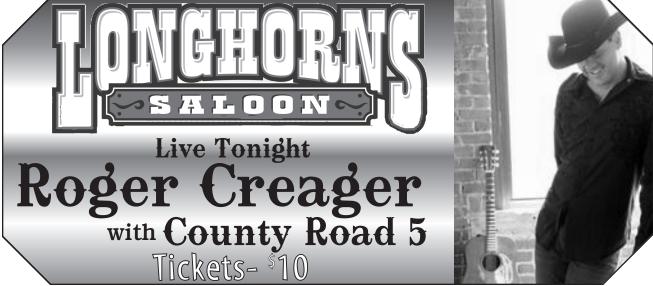

"You're never the same person after you've stepped outside your comfort zone," she said. "It is enriching. It makes you a better person and a better professional no matter what you end up doing."

Tax to come up for renewal

The commissioners are expected to vote on this matter tonight.

The second item on the agenda will be the discussion of jobs and road sales tax renewals. Strawn said there is currently a sales tax in effect, but it is due to expire at the end of the year. During the meeting, the city commissioners and the county commissioners will decide if they will agree to renew the sales tax, which will help the city economically. Also, the county will have the ability to pay for new roads, road construction, among other improvements

All citizens are encouraged to attend the City Commission meetings. The meeting will begin tonight at 4 p.m., and it is available on cable channel 3 and by live Webcast on the City's Web site, Ci.manhattan.ks.us.

"I thought it would be a lot more difficult than it is," Theis said. "I met with our dining center's dietitian and she did a great job of helping me navigate the foods that I should and should not eat. So far there hasn't been a day that there was just nothing I couldn't find."

However, Rivarola wishes there were more markings on campus foods and said it would be good to have a list of foods she could eat when there is not time to cook or when she is running back and forth between home and campus.

Bonawitz admits there is a shortage of Bonawitz admits there is a shortage of labels on dining center food.

"We are unable to label simply due to the large amount of food we serve in the dining halls, which is a separate entity than the Food Court in the Union, which is run by Cartwells," she said.

She added that students should seek out one of the 102 dietitians employed if they need help with choosing their food.

"Don't freak out if you find out you have a food allergy," Theis said. "I found that it really isn't as bad as it seemed at first."

POOL | Presentation about pool gives options, seeks community input

stand, bathhouse and slides. They would like to extend the concessions stand and renovate the bathhouse and changing rooms. One possible addition is a family changing area.

In the large pool that is currently there, the team is giving the community several options to consider for enhancing it. Large floating pool toys, a basketball goal and waterslide are attractions they are looking to add to the main pool area.

"A big part of these design is not just to decide things and move forward, but to have a menu of things and prioritize those," Schwartz said. "We don't know right now what we can afford, so we want preferences."

As far as financing, the city is providing $2 million for the pool renovation. The money will come from the sales tax revenue that is currently levied, so there will be no sales tax increase for the pool, said Eddie Eastes of the Parks and Recreation department.

Mia Schreiner, Manhattan resident, attended the presentation. She said she liked how informative it was and enjoyed the design teams' openness to suggestions.

"My main concern is safety and just an expansion for the community to come together as a family and have fun," Schreiner said. "I like the design. There are some things I'd tweak about it, but it's nice."

Schwartz said the plan is still very open to change and that it is not completed. They request the community's input on features they would like to see or concerns they may have. They ask anyone wishing to provide feedback to contact Jen Rahne with the HWS Consulting Group at (785) 539-2202 or jrahnes@hws.com
